Inquiry Question/Path How does social networking affect peer relationships?

REF.	DETAILS	COMMENTS
Source # and location in the source: Source #4	I record details, ideas, or information that I find in my sources that help me answer my inquiry questions:	I explain the reason why I think they are important, and write personal comments:
P3-4	The idea of friendship is more complicated with social media sites because every connection is a "friend" no matter what kind of relationship you have with them.	This is especially true with facebook, although there are some ways to change your settings so that there are different groups of people like "close friends", "friends". Its like real life where you know lots of people, but you don't have the same relationship with everyone.
P5-6	Social Networking encourages people to share too much information about thier personal lives	There are lots of people who share every detail of their day in their status updates and tweets.
P7-8	"There is so much information to consume that we rarely spend any time exploring any of it in great depth".	The amount of information on social networking sites can be overwhelming. And it's hard to turn it off because its tempting to know everything that is going on.
